

MODERN LIES.—Rev. E. H. Chapin is delivering a lecture in Northern cities on "Practical Life," in which he goes far to prove this is a living world. He says there are lies of custom and lies of fashion; lies of padding and lies of whiteness; lies of the first water in diamonds of paste and unblushing blushes of lies which give quite a different complexion; the politician's lies, who like a circus rider, rides two horses at once; the coquette's lies, who, like a professor of legerdemain, keep six paces dancing at a time; lies sandwiched between bargains; lies in every kind of debased coinages, in all the pomp of gold band and button; lies of red tape; and sealing wax; lies from the canon's mouth lies in the name of glorious principles that might make dead heroes chatter in their graves; Melakoffs of lies standing upon sacred dust, and lifting their audacious pinacles in the light of the eternal Heaven!

A FIRST WOMAN.—I am a woman, with a woman's weakness, and having a good constitution, can bear a great deal of happiness! If I was asked my idea of perfect bliss, I shan't say, "a fast horse, a duck of a cutter, plenty of buffalo robes, a nest fitting over-coat with a hard sown lining, and—and—and one of Madame Wa'sh's little French bonnets."

If that wouldn't be happiness for one life time, I'm open to conviction as to what would!—Lady Cor. Boston Post.

LADY KILLER.

Reader, did you ever see those things called Lady Killers? If no, just look at that shawl wearer and that Shanghai coat in individual.—See how they strut. Those are Lady Killers.—Those are the individuals that crev. in their own estimation (such a "smash up") among the dear creatures' hearts. They are the assassins who kill at every glance—who with a mere wick of the eye, or a curl of her mustache, can private a lady's heart. See how gracefully Mr. Shanghai twirls his little silver mounted one, with what a refined air he is talking to Mr. Shabby Shawl wearer. One would jingle the weight of an empire was upon his shoulders from his master. That old colored hat is worn in mere eccentricity, nothing more! Look at his legs—how are they—yes, those are modish tight; they are human's safety vest for he can stop to nuzzle! They walk our streets as if millions of men were in their possession; they drive fast horses, drink nothing so plumbish as bawdy Longwhistle's Sparkling Catawba, the least they can think of; attend non-but fashionable balls; opera; their delight always have the first eight-side of the season.—Home Journal.

PUPPY LOVE.

One of the most singular impulses of the human heart, and one that seems the most ridiculous to think of, is alter-life, is boy-love, or as it is commonly designated, "puppy love." It is a species of temporary insanity, and strange as it may seem, it affects the system of the boy at a much earlier age now, than it did twenty years ago. Under the present progressive system of going through the world, he boy, at a very early age begins to appreciate manly ways. He looks "sleepy" at all the girls he meets, a tenderness and the heart flourishes a cane, smokes a cigar and struts! He "falls in love," as the popular expression has it, or more properly speaking, "comes up to it." He looks upon the world as a very hum-drum affair, and fancies that he exists in some kind of an ethereal fairy region, where comes from all this do away with the necessity of sun, moon and stars, and all such common-place lights. He carries in his hand with flagrant ointments a cambric handkerchief with essences, seizes the glittering ring and in a moment of desperation, shaves for bird! He becomes a walking library of poetry, inquires to himself all such stanzas as end with "love and dove"—"heart and dart"—"kiss and kiss"—"I and wife." He repeats poetries and beef-steaks, and fees upon the sides and shadow of his beloved Mary Ann.—Her smiles with him the seventh heaven of ecstasy, and her frowns plunges him into a dark hell of misery "out of the beam of cheering hope, a park glimmering day!"

He gazes at himself in the mirror, and looks more pitifully from a heart. He fancied himself the most dearest of loves, and ready whishes for some occasion to prove his gallantry, by seeing his Mary Ann home through a thunder storm or helping her pull a speckled trout from the pool. He grows magnanimous, and generously appropriates the dimes his uncle gave him to buy cakes and candies with, to the procuring from the artist a miniature of his adorable Mary Ann. The rays of joyousness

he wraps the picture-sleeps with it under his pillow—kisses it, and dashes it on night. He despise wealth

"Love in a cottage" is his idea of earthly bliss. He views in pictures beauty that he would swim in the ocean—climb the north pole—see the forests and wild Indians—safe mountains, and do a number of impossible things for the love and service of his God. A flower that he placed adown below said treasure to him, and he care fully passes it between the leaves of his "First Class Reader!" He is like a little tea-kettle. Sometimes, "Mary Ann" overquires of his cap. He means he company of other boys of his own age and stature, yet he acquaints no Jim Jones, because he saith that May Ann has gray eyes and ogled; and upon a point of halloving Rob Rutherford, in to compare her's eyes on his daughter with his ethereal Mary Ann.

Harry wears in puppy love with ishape and despondence; its joys and trials tempt him to gloom and sadness, and heat buries itself in fugitive ruffles, and is intensely preoccupied.
